As a leading company in the semiconductor industry, Elmos maintains a regular exchange of information, opinions, and knowledge with members from industry, politics, and the society. Elmos is a member of various trade associations representing the interests of the high-tech industry at national and international level.

Outside of association activities, Elmos does not exert any direct political influence on legislative procedures and does not engage in any active or offensive lobbying. It is not in line with our values, nor is it our intention, to influence either parties or public authorities politically. Instead, we are committed to the automotive future through active participation in national and international cooperative research projects within the semiconductor industry.

With the exception of membership fees for trade associations, Elmos does not make any direct or indirect financial or material donations to political organizations or parties. This also applies to members of the government, members of parliament, and election candidates.

Elmos is committed to conducting its engagement activities in line with global environmental treaties such as the Paris Agreement. The relevant trade associations through which Elmos is engaged indirectly also support national and international legislation regarding sustainability, for example the Paris Agreement.
